Insurers

You know one of the things that insurers always advocate are protective devices and prevention material. Prevention is obviously the preferred choice on anything and that's not even just from our own interest but from a consumer's interest because invariably when a loss occurs, people lose things that can't be replaced. From a monetary standpoint we can try and restore your home to pre-loss conditions, we can help you recover damaged goods, but invariably there are items of sentimental value that really only prevention would have helped.

Of the interior floods that insurance companies have claims records on, somewhere between 60 and 70 percent are due to pipe breakage. We've found for example that one medium size company here in the United States had national damage figures for interior flooding totaling 36,000 claims over the last year that totaled about $95 million in damage, so this isn't insignificant.

We believe that mold and mildew from water leaks is becoming a major issue in the industry today and we are installing the FloodStopper System in all of our new homes. We are hoping it will also assist our homeowners in insurance cost reductions. On the economy of scale, for what it costs us to put in a FloodStopper System, it just doesn't make sense not to do it. It would be like not putting carpet in the bedroom.

Recently your system saved me from a major insurance claim. At midnight I was asleep in bed when the security company phoned and alerted me to a silent alarm that indicated there was a water leak in the house. The high-pressure hot water line had blown out from its connection to the dishwasher.

The water supply to the house had been automatically turned off and there was no water coming from the line. I corrected the problem and reactivated the system. Had this leak continued all night, or even for a few hours, the damage would have been very serious. Hardwood floors and expensive photographic and computer equipment on the lower level would have been ruined. I am sure the insurance claim would have been in the region of $15,000 to $20,000. With your system there was absolutely no damage. This is an excellent product, which should probably be installed in every home. I have no hesitation to recommend it to my friends and to anyone who might read this letter.

My daughter came home one evening late, did a clothes wash and put in too much soap, resulting in a bubble bath for the sensor. The system shut the water off immediately. The money invested in your system is the most valued home investment one could make and I highly recommend it for retrofit as well as new construction.

Shortly after we had a FloodStopper installed in our North Central San Antonio home, my wife called me at work to say the water in the house was turned off. I told her to go around the house and check, that we probably had something leaking. She did, but couldn't find anything, not around the sinks or toilet, so I told her to go out in the garage and hit the reset button. Moments later she called back, saying the water had shut off again.

It was then that I remembered that there were sensors placed underneath our A/C pans. I told my wife to look under the A/C unit in the hallway closet. She pulled off the grate, and sure enough, she said it was chock full of water under the air conditioner. It was starting to come out onto the carpet and seep out. When I got home from work we mopped up the water with a sponge and contacted the air conditioning repairman, who cleared out the clogged condensation line in the unit. If we didn't have the FloodStopper System, we would have run the air conditioner all day and night and woken up to find water in the hallway, in the baby's room, everywhere. We would have lost carpet in the back half of the house, for sure. Instead of costing me a $500 deductible, we were out a 35-cent sponge.
